

35,000 attendees at RECon a sign of healthy retail industry, strong economy

This is the headline from the first day recap at the 2015 I.C.S.C. RECon convention and trade show. It is a welcome and encouraging statement for the Commercial Real Estate industry.

The Broadbent Leasing and Sales team attended the 2015 RECon this week. I.C.S.C. is the International Council of Shopping Centers and RECon is their annual convention and trade show. It brings together tens of thousands of commercial real estate professionals to meet and share their current and future plans. And in today's climate of technological communication the convention provides the opportunity to meet face-to-face with current and prospective clients. We are glad to say this 2015 show was a busy and productive one for The Broadbent Company.

“The number of people flocking to this year’s RECon not only testifies to the growth of the global economy, but also speaks to the health and robustness of the shopping center model,” said ICSC President and CEO Michael P. Kercheval. “Landlords and retailers are voting with their money on the future of the shopping center.”
